STUDENT ACTIVITY COUNCIL

Elected by the student body after a period of vigorous campaigning, the members of the Student Activity Council are charged with a host of duties that run all the way from selling tickets to various events to the selection of the date and location of the Senior Prom. The office of the Council is located on the first floor of Brother Benjamin Hall and is the center of all student activities. It is sometimes a place of noise and confusion, but it accomplishes its assignments and represents the voice of the student body.

A rich variety of athletics is offered to the Prep student — tennis, soccer, football (starting at the freshman level), martial arts, fencing, etc. Under the direction of Athletic Director Fred Glatz, the Prep sports program offers interscholastic competition for every age group. A staff of capable and dedicated coaches keeps the athletic program in high gear at all seasons of the year.

Hey! That's my ball!

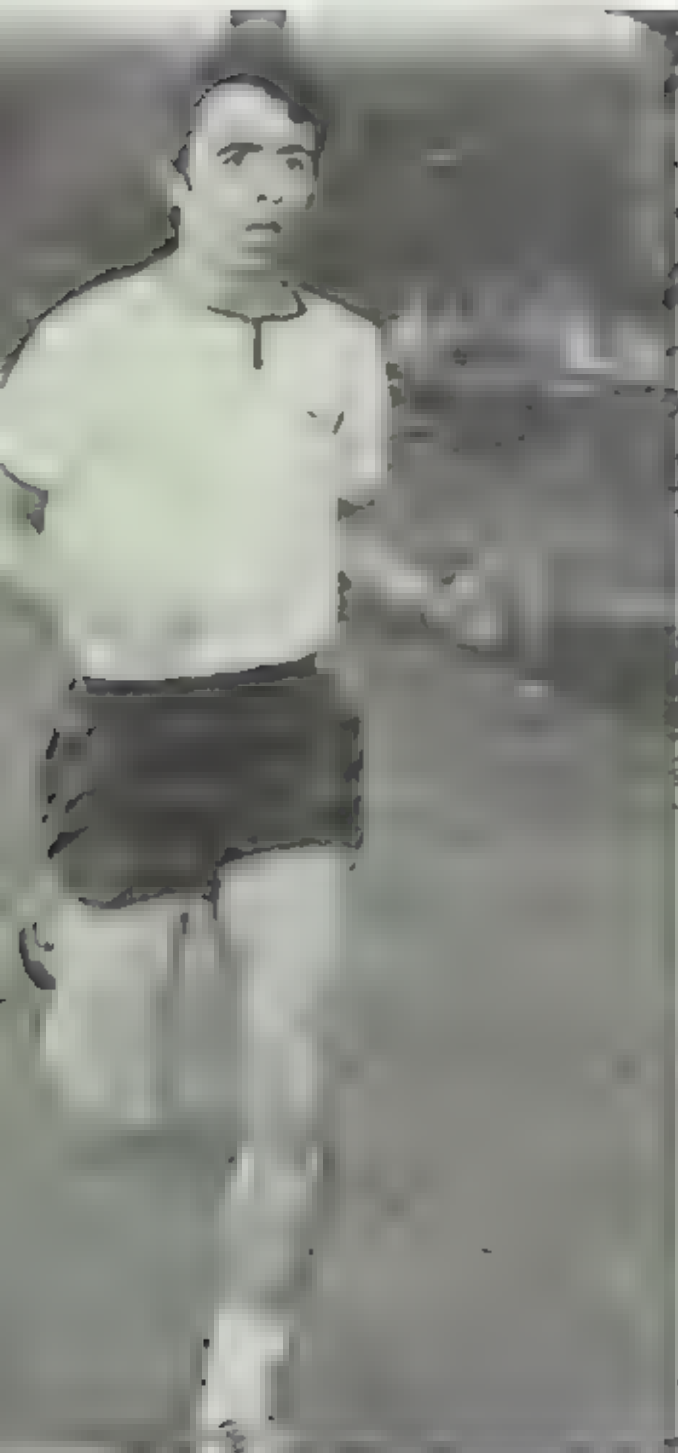

We had the faculty on the run! At least it seems so from these pictures by Scott Maguire . . . This was a day when the faculty had a chance to show off and demonstrate to the students how they used to run when they were high school kids and didn't have to spend their leisure hours correcting papers

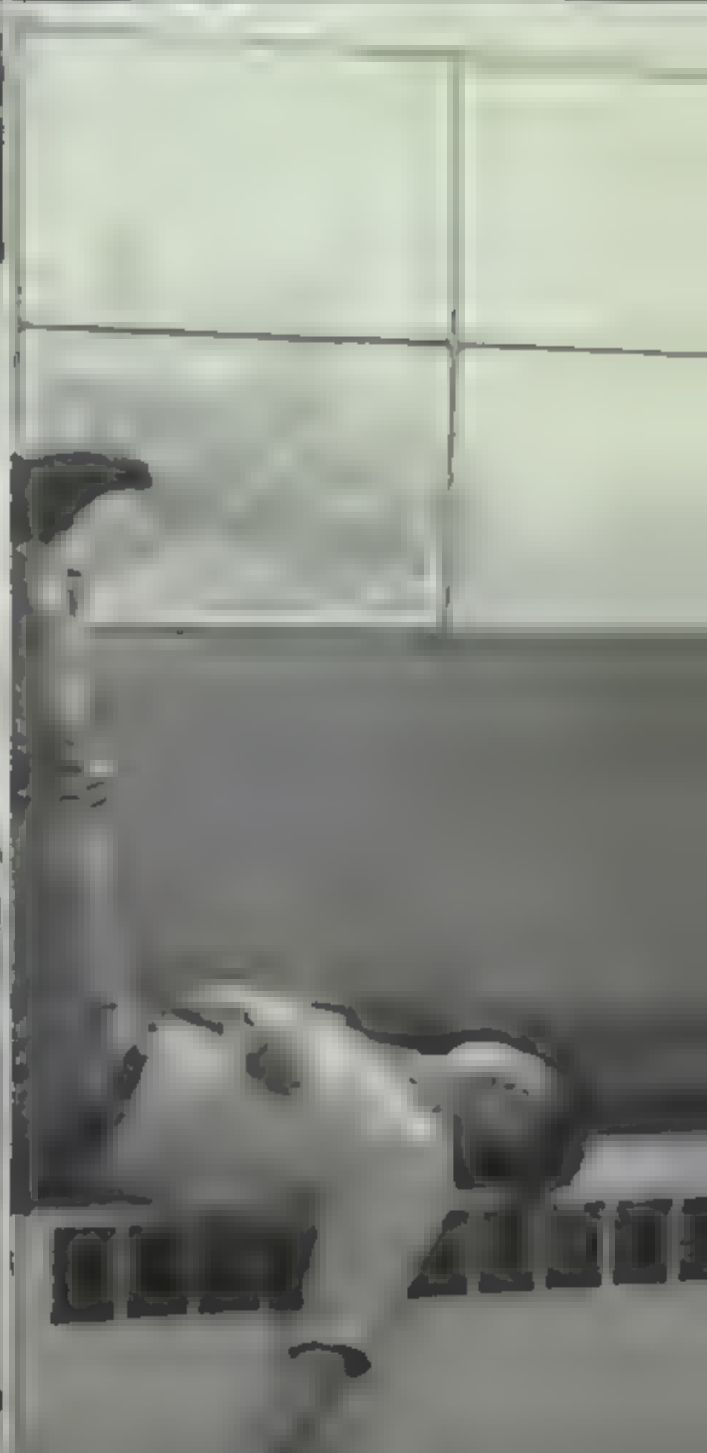

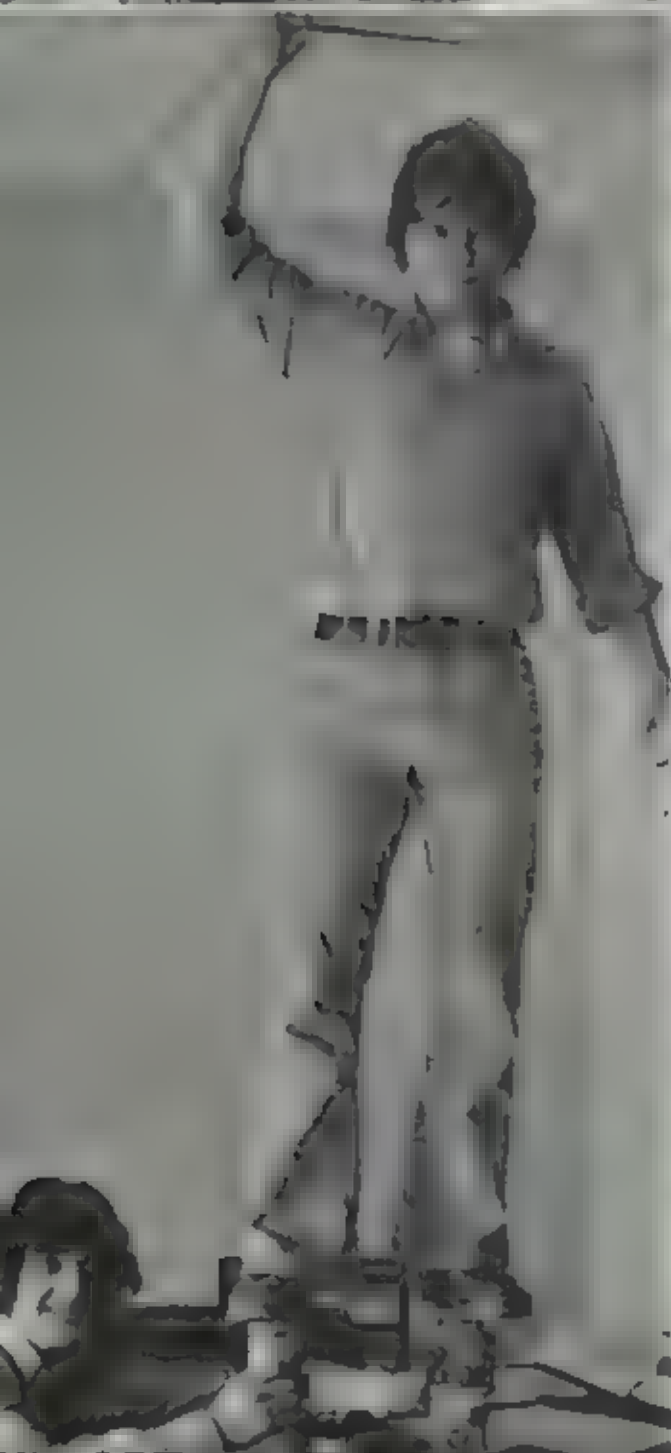

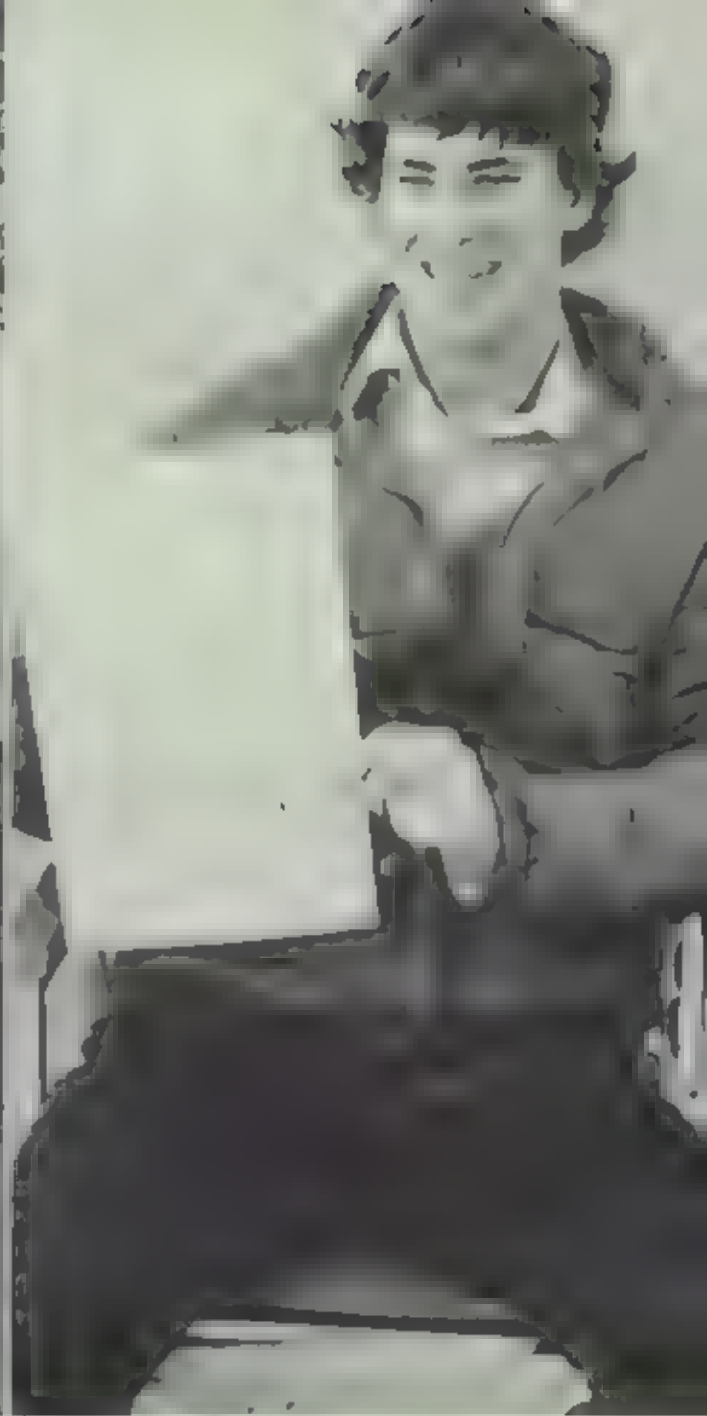

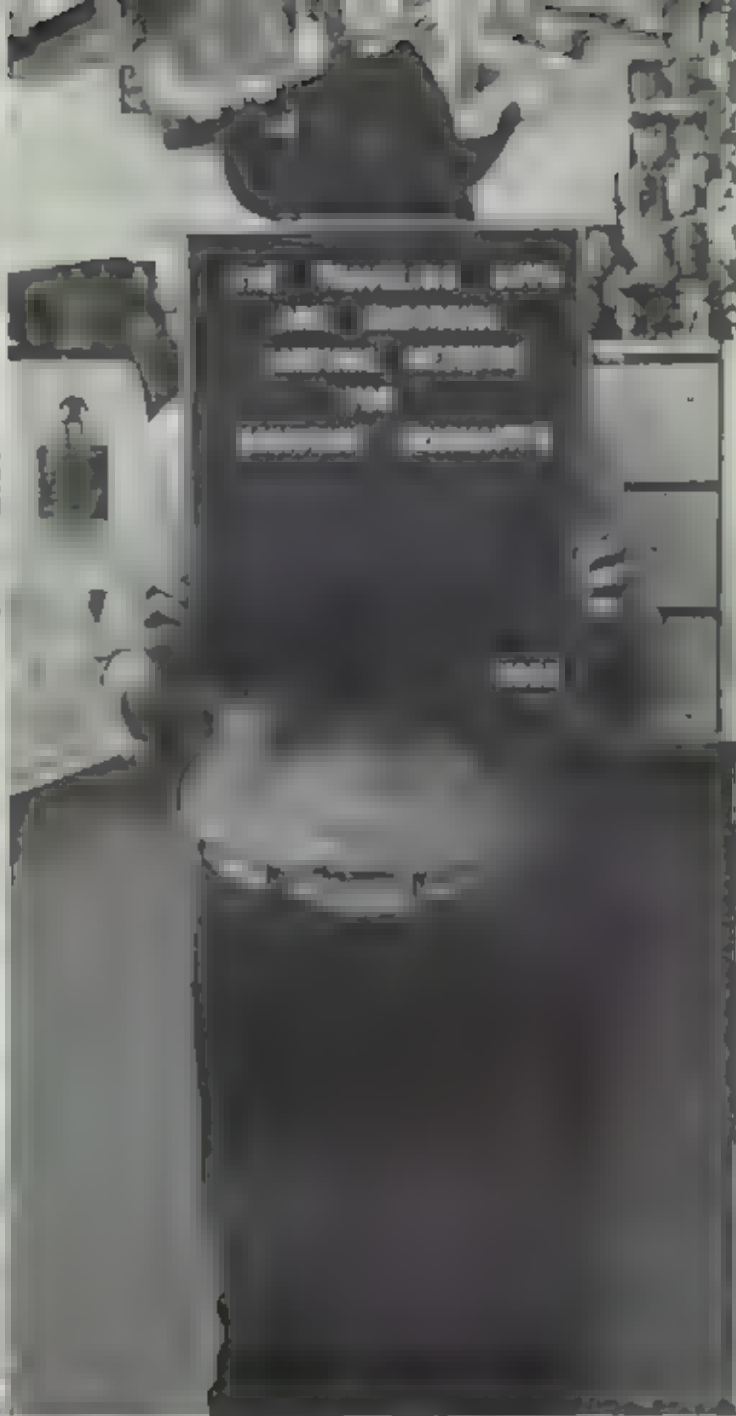

The race goes to the swift and we had a swift faculty—at least on this particular day!

Parting is such sweet sorrow —except when it's two-fifteen on a school day and freedom is beckoning and the bus is waiting and you get the feeling that you were born to be rolling along towards home. Books and classrooms and teachers can be forgotten for at least a while and maybe something funny will happen on the trip home and maybe tomorrow will be a "snow day" with the promise of a long sleep in the morning. Two-fifteen is the best part of the day!

For endless generations Prep students have waited for the bus at the end of the school day. A few students come and go to school in the good weather by bicycle or motor scooter and many upperclassmen have their own cars, but by and large it's bus travel at some point in a student's life. It's generally not a long wait, but in the coldness of late autumn or the bleakness of winter the waiting seems to last forever. "They also serve who only stand and wait."

The members of the Mass. Community Corps not only man the "hot line" in the Operation Venus program and lend a listening ear to those who are seeking advice and help, but they also engage in other varied activities such as the collection of food for needy families and toys for children at Christmas time. In an age when the well-being of our fellow man is oftentimes forgotten, they endeavor to make charity something real and concrete. To be of service to others is their battle-cry and they deserve all sorts of credit for their labors

Assembling the various parts of a yearbook is always an eternal problem. There are pictures to be taken, captions and copy to be written, layouts to be prepared. In the midst of all this there are always deadlines to be met and then the job of waiting for proof to be corrected. There's no easy way to do it, no easy road to follow!

PEDAGOGICALLY SPEAKING

Here they are . . . Some of the teachers who trained and moulded us and made up Prep-pies . . . Mrs. John Larivee and Mr. Brian O'Loughlin whose voice resounded through the ancient halls of Xavier . . . And Mr. John Westfield and Brother Joseph Comber who told us about Aeneas and Dido and the fall of Troy . . . And Mr. William Mackinso and Brother David Mahoney . . . And Mr. Fred Glatz whose exhortations will echo in our ears long after we've left the Prep . . . To them and to all the other teachers whose pictures are scattered throughout this book we wish to express belated thanks

Anon.

During my four years at the Prep I was the Average Guy, the Unsung Hero, the Kid in the Back Seat whose name teachers sometimes couldn't remember, the Ordinary Slob, the Quiet One in class discussions

I never made a varsity team, though I tried out for freshman football, I never had a role in a Dramatic Club production. I was never a member of the Chess Club or the National Honor Society or the Student Activity Council. Though girls were't unknown to me and I had my share of dates I could never be classified as the Life of the Party.

I got a little below average marks. Never failed a subject but never reached the heights—scholastically speaking, hard-working kid who never caused trouble in class but was recommended to apply to a college of non-Ivy League stature

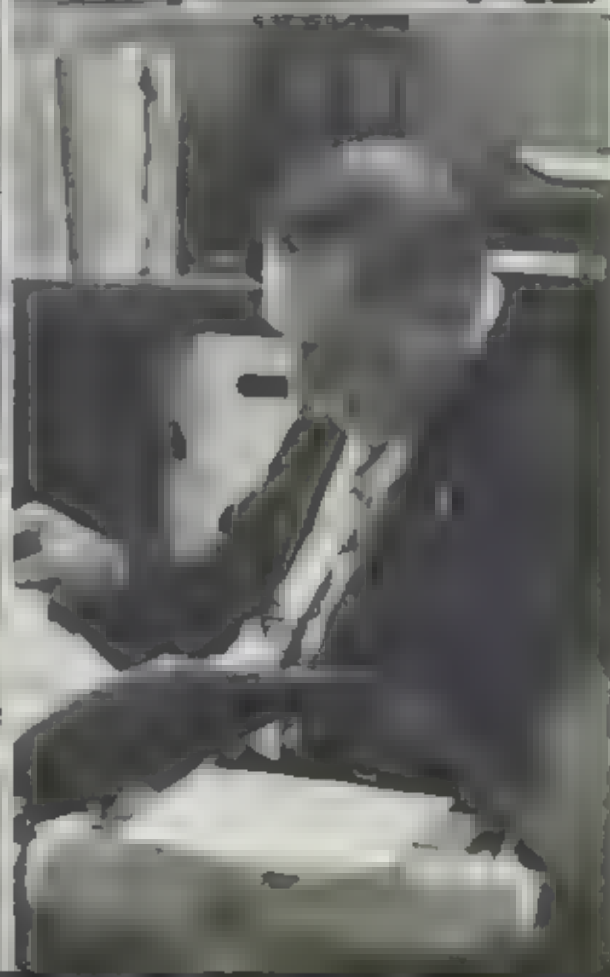

For four years I went to school regularly, was rarely absent, and sat in the back of classrooms and kept quiet. I read the required books and didn't rock any boats and was described at various times as lethargic, uninspired, ordinary

The years went by. I plodded along, absorbed some knowledge, kept wondering what this thing called education was all about.

Then one day in the spring of my senior year I had a chance encounter with a teacher whom I had never had in class. We talked, and for some reason I told him of my mediocrity, of my averageness, of my unwillingness to participate in discussions. And he laughed and gave me a quotation that I asked him to repeat so I could copy it down. It was from some American humorist by the name of Don Herold: "I had, out of my sixty teachers, a scant half dozen who couldn't have been supplanted by phonographs."

So towards the end of my years at the Prep I finally realized why I had been mediocre, average, ordinary. No one had really convinced me that there are heights to climb, rivers to be crossed, battles to be won. No one had told me about the search for the Holy Grail

Memories . . .

By the time that this edition of the SPIRE is published we'll have graduated and will be struggling to make it somewhere on a college campus. But the things and the people we'll remember from our years at the Prep are many and varied

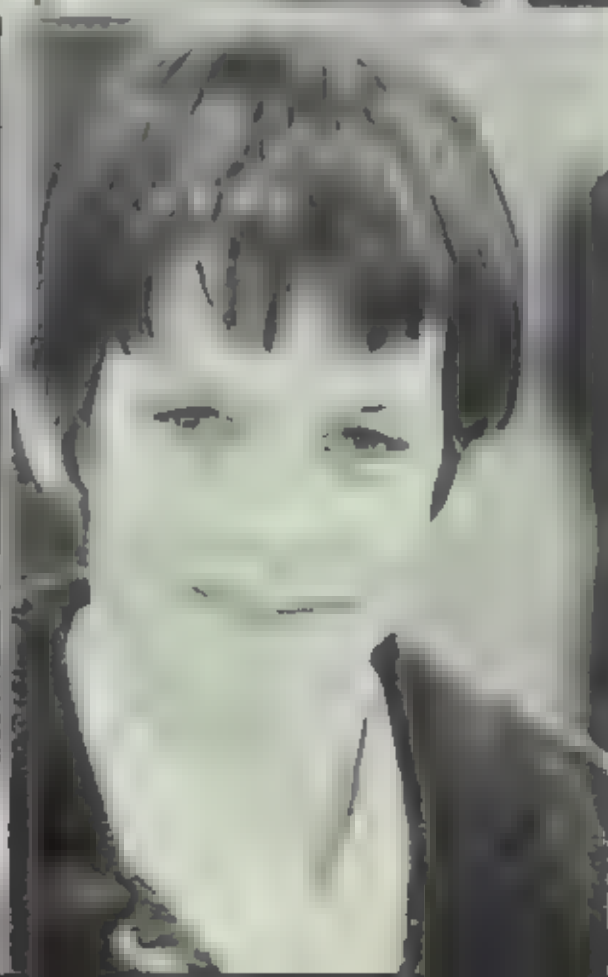

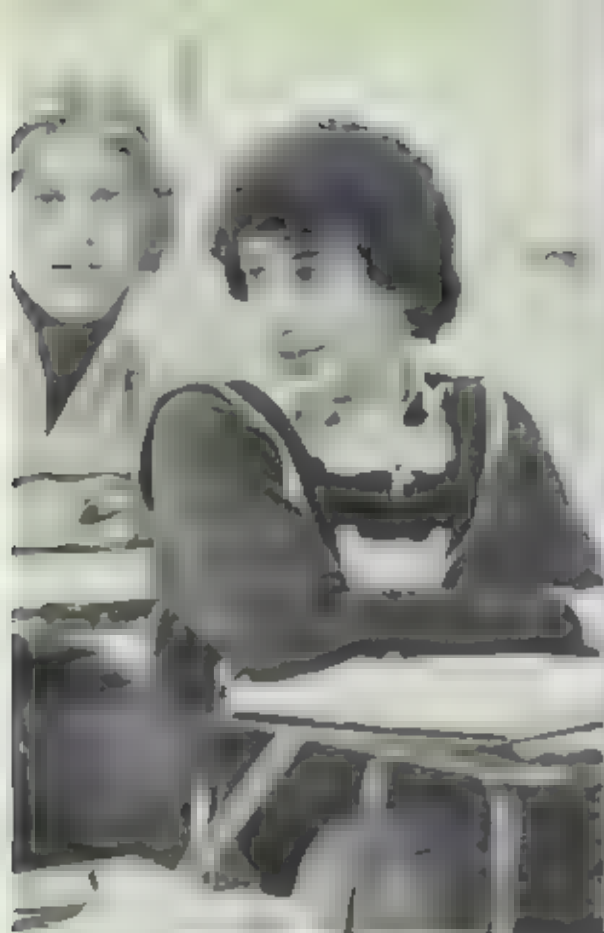

The long walk from the lower parking lot up Spring Street to the school building . . . The Prep book bags that we lugged everywhere when we were Frosh . . . The money we spent in the bookstore over a four-year period . . . Our first encounter with Mr. Flatley after we had been absent from school . . . Our consistent failure to make the Headmaster's List . . . Our eternal struggle with the Latin language . . . The brown bags in which we carried our lunch and the thrill of opening the bags for the jam-and-peanut butter sandwiches that were always there . . .

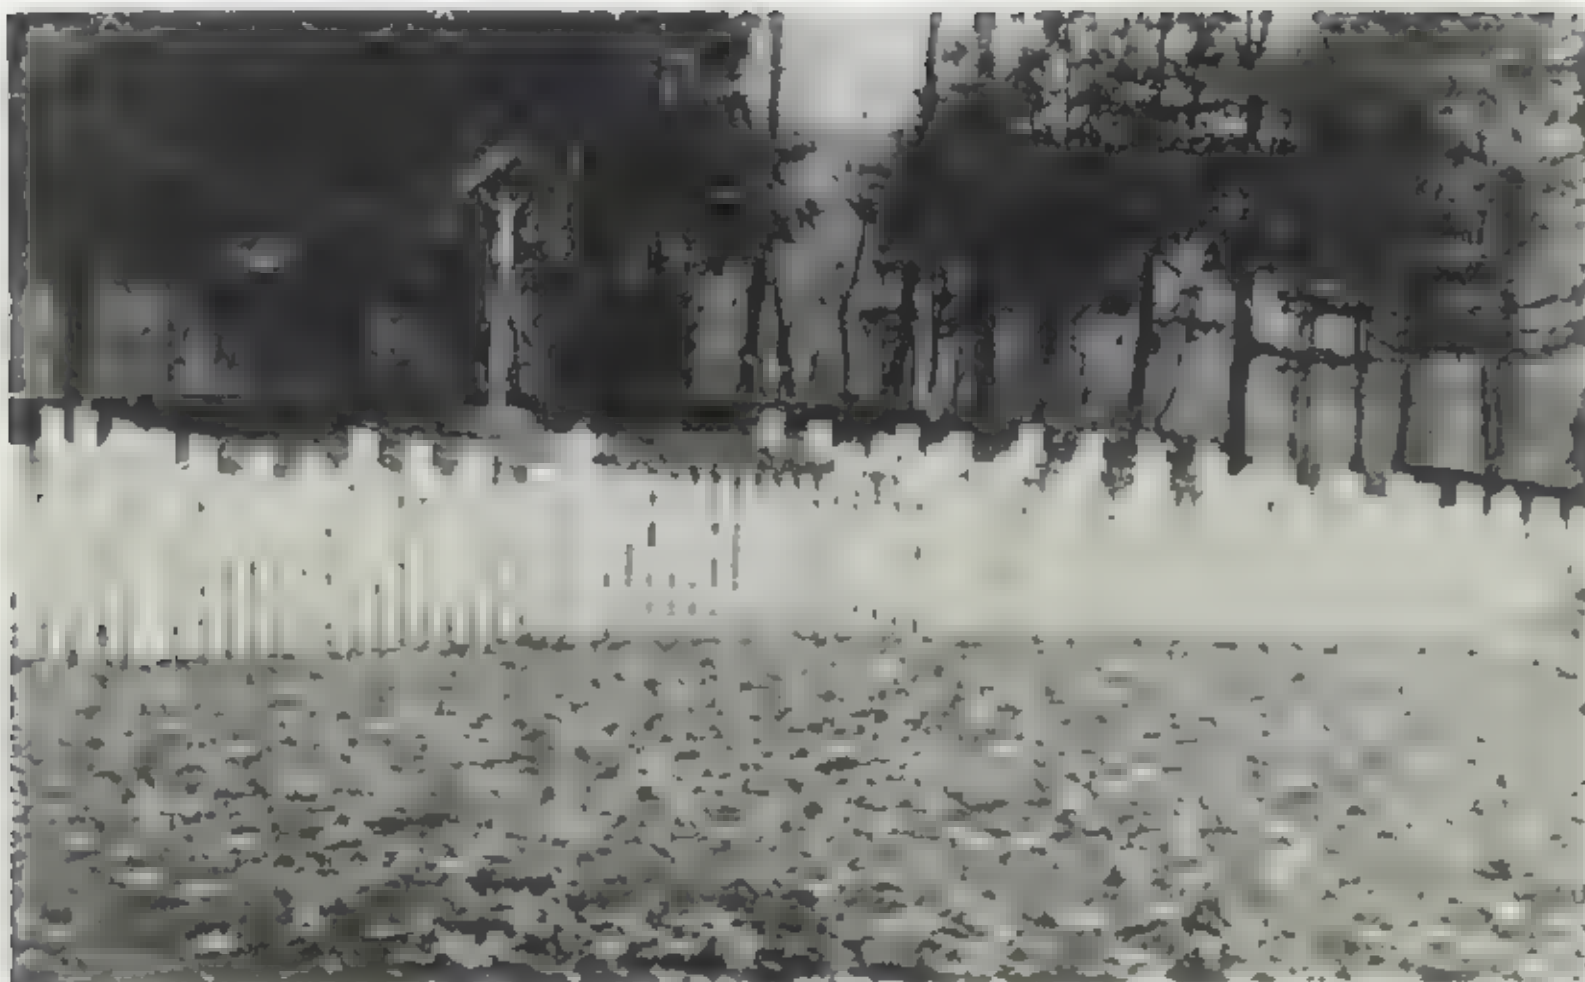

Waiting for the bus on cold, cold mornings with only the prospect of another school day to cheer us up or depress us . . . The mad scramble before school to finish homework assignments . . . The joy we felt as we endured the last class on Friday and looked forward to a week-end of skiing in the hills of New Hampshire . . . And those apres-ski parties! . . .

The momentary dejection we felt when we didn't make freshman soccer or freshman baseball . . . Attending football or basketball games and yelling our hearts out and wondering where the rest of the student body was . . . The blizzard of '78 and the wonder of a snowbound world . . . The death of Brother Linus, always the Ace . . . The gradual disappearance of the maple trees along Spring St. . . . Pizza in the dining room and gym classes . . . And the gang that always gathered in the SAC office . . . Card games at some senior's house . . . The joy that was ours when we were finally old enough to drive the family car to school . . . The elation at being accepted to the college of our choice . . . Teachers and classmates . . . The Senior Prom and Commencement . . . Dreams of the past and plans for an always bright future . . . The world was made for the young at heart and we would be forever young . . .

—Class of 1979

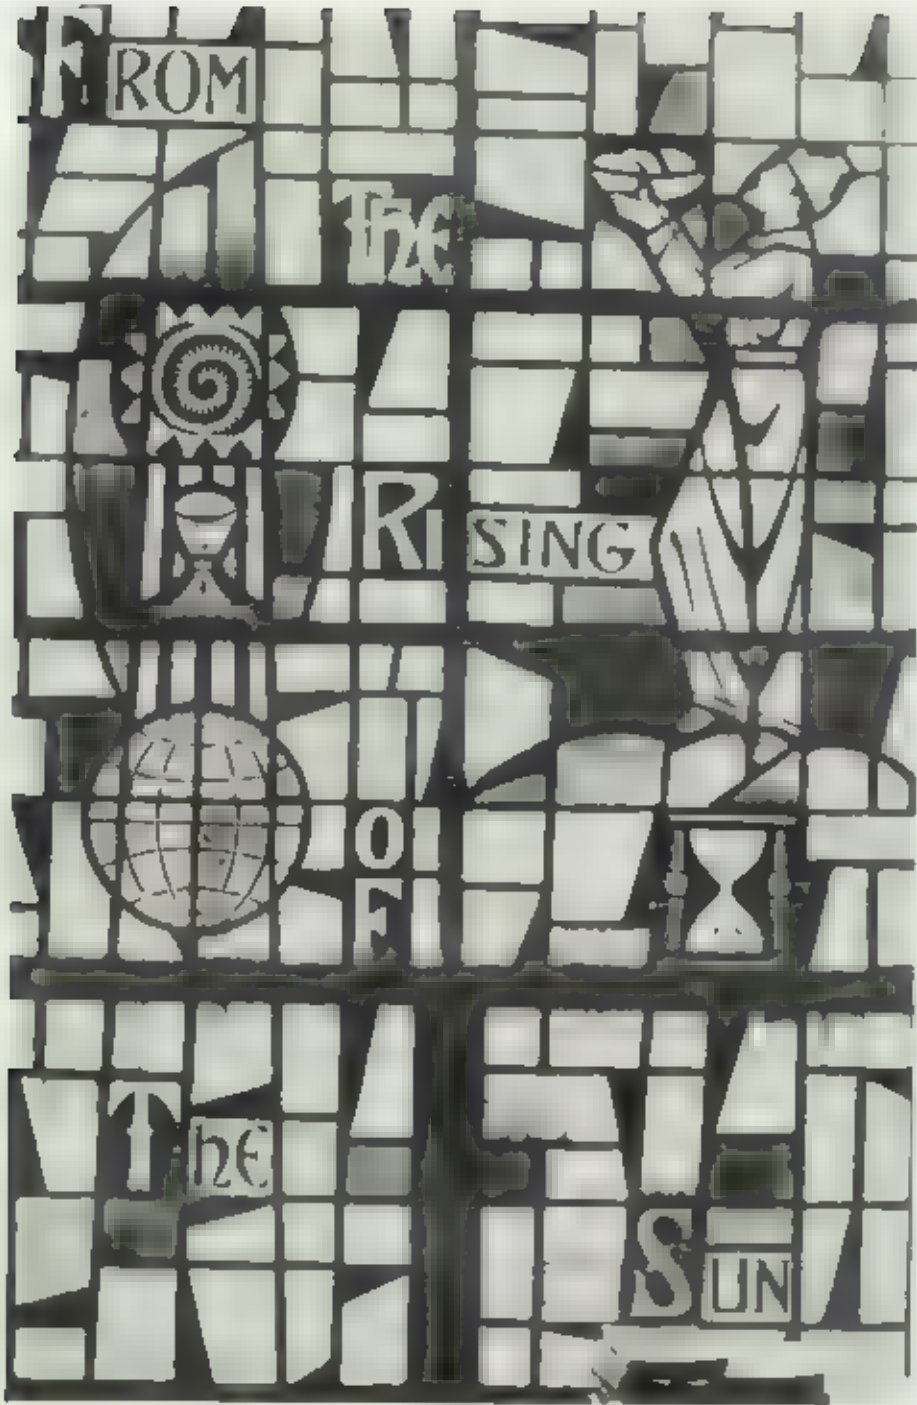

On an October day in my senior year I wandered to the Brothers' cemetery and I looked at the brooding Figure on the crucifix and the long rows of headstones and the red and gold leaves of autumn that were covering the graves.

Here rested dedicated men who had given their lives and their talents to that mysterious something called Catholic Education.

Here, in seemingly endless rows, were the mortal remains of unsung heroes. Here, where leaves were October's tears, were memories of great men and good men whose dedication is sometimes forgotten.

Here, on a somber October day, a senior had long, long thoughts.

Here one understood what the Prep is all about.

A stained glass window in the school chapel . . . A memento of a hurried visit and a quick prayer . . . A reminder of Masses celebrated by Father Dave and Father Tony . . . Of peace in the midst of turmoil . . . An island of tranquillity . . .

"Art," said Chesterton, "is man's signature." And in Mr. Sheehan's art classes we tried, in our own small way, to leave our signature, our own conception of beauty . . . Our attempts to leave something of ourselves on canvas . . .

XAVIER HALL

It's an old building. The cornerstone tells us it was erected in 1911 and since that year it has been bursting with life and its corridors have seen generations of Prep students come and go.

Its spire—from which the yearbook gets its name—gives it a distinctive appearance that makes it recognizable from distant highways. Flanked by the gymnasium on one side and the Administration Building on the other, it rears its sprawling massiveness towards the sky with an almost arrogant self-assurance. Much more than Brother Benjamin Hall it seems to be the Prep.

Years ago its upper two stories were home for scores of resident students. In dormitories and private rooms now nameless and long forgotten students followed a strict schedule that demanded early morning rising for Holy Mass and bed by ten o'clock every evening. Its basement was occupied by athletic locker rooms and bookstore and canteen and club rooms and heaven knows what else.

Today the first floor of Xavier Hall is occupied by the French and Spanish and Latin departments, by the Massachusetts Community Corps, by the offices of the Business Manager. And the second floor is used by the Campus Ministry for week-end Retreats.

There's a bell in the spire of Xavier Hall that each graduating class endeavors to ring on the last day of school. The ringing of the bell has become sort of symbolic of the end of four years for another graduating class, of the closing of the curtain on the adolescent life and dreams of still another generation.

Yes, it's an old building, Xavier Hall, sort of scarred by weather and the passing of the years. But its spire still calls to graduates, and alumni still dream of it when they sing the words of the Alma Mater Song at class reunions: "Far above the neighboring hill tops

A salute to the wintry days of the past four years! And to the frigid days when we waited in not so mute agony for the bus or the car pool that would take us to the Prep or pick us up in the afternoon for the homeward journey

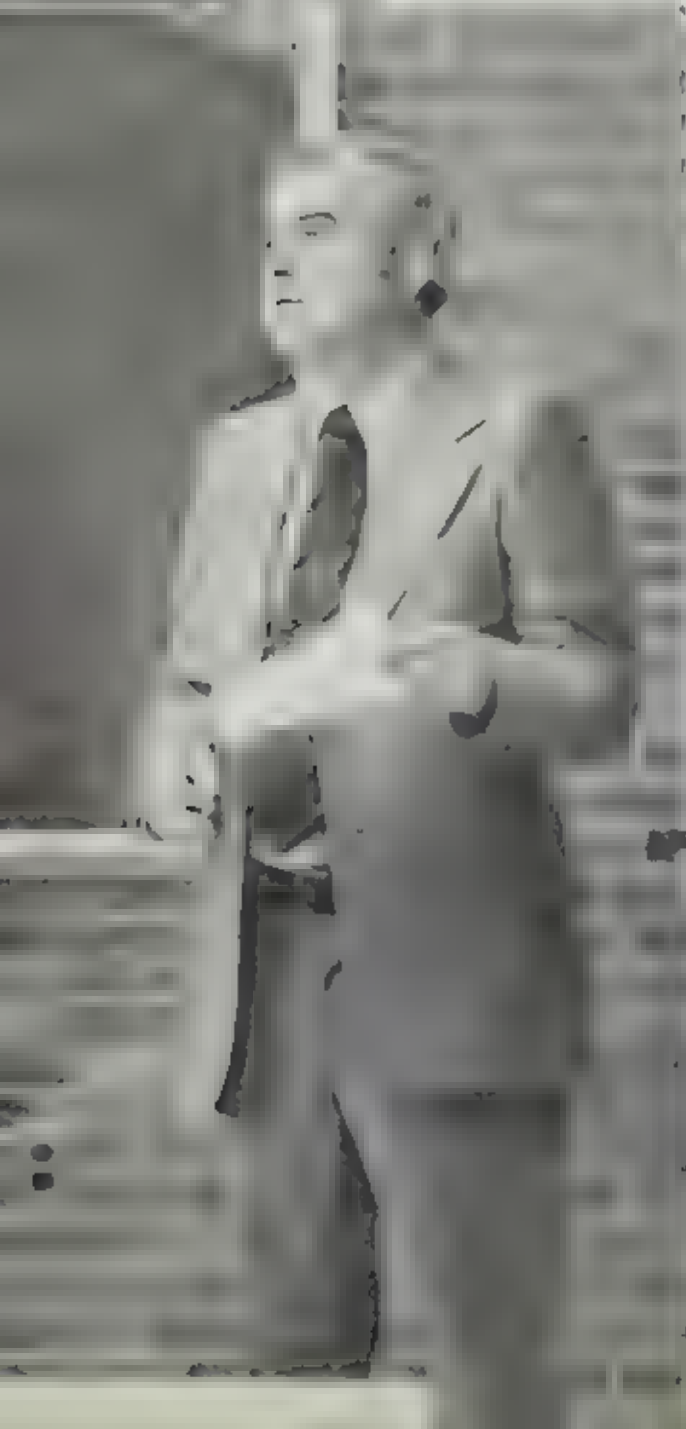

January or February—and sometimes even March—winds had a cutting quality that pierced to the very bone and left misery in their wake. How we dreamed — as we shivered and waited — of Tahitian beaches and sun drenched Florida shores!

And then there was the walk across campus from Brother Benjamin Hall to Xavier Hall for language classes. How our teeth chattered French or Spanish or Latin as we braved winds that seemed to have come directly from the North Pole. It was not the Montreal Express but the Danvers Express!

CAMPUS MINISTRY

With a staff composed of Brother Chad Mudd, C.F.X., Brother Thomas Pearson, C.F.X., Mr. David Malaro, Mr. William Mackinson, Sister Mary Delaney, S.N.D., Sister Ann Marie Hayes, S.C., Father David Marszalek, O.F.M., and Father Anthony Penna, C.S.S., the Campus Ministry is now an essential part of the Prep scene.

Through teaching, counseling, presiding at liturgical functions, informal casual settings, and Sophomore Retreat Weekends, The Campus Ministry endeavors "to awaken a living faith within each student and to help him to see the necessary link between his faith and his moral behavior."

Through Operation Venus, the Mass, Alcohol Teen Team, Operation Pilgrim and Operation Santa Claus, through the nursing home ministry, students are given the chance to share their faith and love with others both within and without the Prep community

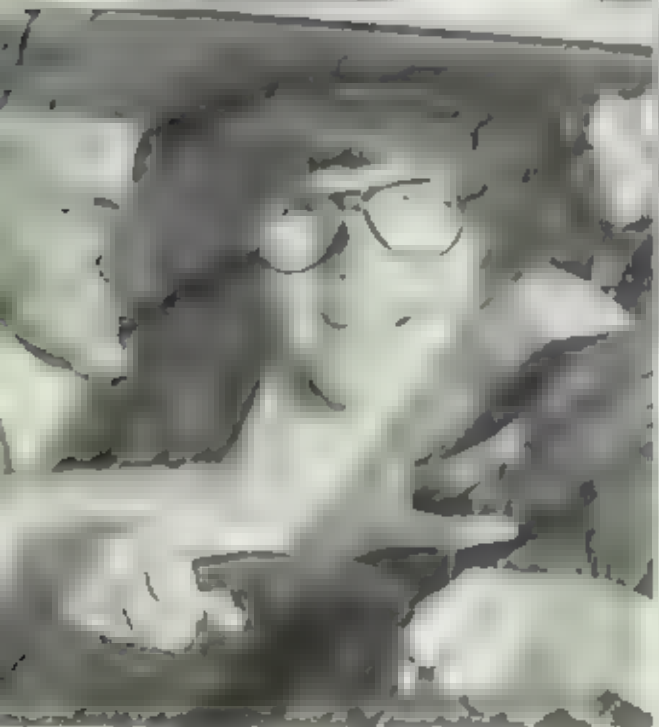

Mr. Robert Combe, Director of Guidance, and Mr. James Stager, Sophomore Counselor, are shown above. They are assisted by Mr. Robert McKenna Junior Counselor, and Mr. Frank Sheehan, Freshman Counselor. To all of them our thanks for four years of direction

In an age when attendance at high school games all across the country is fast declining we want to pay tribute to those students, parents, and alumni who brave the elements to root their team on to possible victory. It's good to know that here at the Prep there are still some who believe that the cheers of the spectators are an important ingredient in the success of an athletic team.

SWAN SONG

By the time this volume of the SPIRE appears we'll have departed from the halls of learning" — St. John's Prep — and will have joined the long line of graduates and will have become members of the ALUMNI ASSOCIATION who regularly get letters asking for financial assistance for dear old Alma Mater

The inevitable question: where did the four years go? Whatever happened to those beautiful days when we tried out for Freshman Football, made the Freshman Basketball Team, struggled with the third declension in Latin, believed in what our teachers and coaches told us, had pretty much of an Eagle Scout approach to life?

God, we grew up quickly and the four years at the Prep went by quickly and we floundered around in the morass of adolescence and fell in love for the first time and sometimes neglected our books for an exciting week-end of skiing in Vermont or New Hampshire

Some of us were football or hockey heroes and some of us attempted to be intellectuals and all of us had what our teachers called GROWING PAINS

We knew the joys of a party after the Malignon game; the delights of a summer afternoon on the beach; the pleasures of owning our own car; the feeling that all of life was set to disco music

Once in a while — but not too often — we read a book, but we always kept thinking that later on in life when we were married and had settled down we'd find plenty of time for reading

But down came the curtain. The Senior Prom . . . Commencement Memories of the state championship in hockey . . . The bubble had burst

The dream was over . . . Reality was ours . . . A salute to the class of

Maybe the State Championship Hockey Team supplied the inspiration or maybe it was just a year when state titles or other assorted honors just came naturally to Prep teams, but the spring witnessed a unique garnering of honors that ran from the Conference Championship of the baseball team to the State Championship of the tennis team. (Even as we meet our last yearbook deadline the golf team, already Catholic League Champs and Eastern Mass Catholic Champs, are making a strong bid for the state title.)

We've run out of superlatives, but we have to reach into our grab bag of NICE THINGS TO SAY and apply the old, old adjectives of great, wonderful, amazing, preposterous to the tennis team and Coach Brother Edwin B. I. Quigley, Alan Kaufman, Brian Farmer, etc. — they all did a superb job! (Larry Foster and Scott Barker were also State Doubles Champs!) The State Title was doubly sweet because it was acquired through a victory over an arch-rival: Xaverian High!

The spring of 1979 was not a good one weather-wise, but it was great for Prep athletes who must have munched on a "Breakfast of Champions."

In a year when the talk was all of State Championships or possible State Championships it's good that we set aside two pages to salute the ordinary kids who participate in our athletic programs. Some of them never get beyond freshman or junior varsity competition, some of them participate in the so-called "minor" sports that never receive much public recognition. But all of them learn the value of team play, the ideals that should lie behind all athletics at the high school level.
